CAREER PROFILE

I am a school psychologist with more than 33 years of experience in education and public service, and the recently retired director of safety and risk management services for the Salem-Keizer School District in Salem, Oregon. I am the principal author and architect of the Salem-Keizer Model, a threat assessment system being used throughout Oregon, Washington, and a number of other states. Both the U.S. Department of Education and the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation both consider the system to be a gold standard. As such, I remain the primary resource on the fidelity, sustainability, and continued improvement of that model as it evolves within our changing culture and climate.

Through my years of experience, I have gained considerable institutional knowledge and a systems expertise on a wide variety of areas, including public agency partnering, school discipline, special education, Section 504 law, administration and management, human resources, education culture, mental health, educational psychology, behavioral threat assessment, suicide assessment and prevention, sexual misconduct, and extremely disruptive behavioral patterns. Additionally, I have considerable experience in physical security and operational security, including Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design (CPTED), options-based decision-making/response to violent intruder training, emergency management and incident command, security training, de-escalation of aggressive people, and the management of adults who threaten or cause disruption in school settings.

I chaired the Oregon's Mid-Valley Student Threat Assessment Team from its inception in 2000 through 2015, and continue to provide consultation to its membership. I have served as a member of the Marion County Threat Advisory Team since 1999. I am also the editor and principal author of the book Assessing Student Threats: Implementing The Salem-Keizer System, Second Edition.

I now consult with school districts and community agencies around the country, specializing in behavioral threat assessment and school security. I regularly provide training and consultation to audiences nationally on preventing and mitigating human violence, physical and operational security, and response options for violent intruder and active-shooter situations.
